These songs represent only a fraction of his high points, but capture the range of his influence — from the definitive Spanish-language song of the summer to getting Drake to rap in Spanish to topping the Billboard Hot 100. Continue reading the main storyClockwise from top left, Lil Baby; Ella Mai; Lady Gaga; Carrie Underwood; Cardi B.Credit...Clockwise from top left, Prince Williams/Wireimage, via Getty Images; Kevin Winter/Getty Images; Neal Preston/Warner Bros.; Kevin Winter/Getty Images; Theo Wargo/Getty ImagesBy Jon Pareles and Jon CaramanicaOne-off collaborations, movie soundtracks and internet upstarts provided some of the most exciting music this year. In a year in which Spanish-speaking artists teamed with English-speaking artists in droves hoping to make an aftermarket “Despacito,” Bad Bunny stayed his course, and the world came to him.Cutting, spare, wide-eyed, seismic.The return of 1994 R&B.Head-stomp koans for runways and back alleys alike.The sweet spot where vocalists blur into each other, and words blur into raw feeling.From “A Star Is Born,” the place where misery meets triumph.An unhinged looser from two unbothered buddies.A stripped-bare evocation of street-corner grief.Not a plea, but an insistent statement of purpose.Spooky and unflustered tough talk.Carrie Underwood’s latest album, also called “Cry Pretty,” opened at No. 1.Credit...Kevin Winter/Getty ImagesHowitzer vocals applied to the realization that not everything can be solved with Howitzer vocals.The sound of blood rushing through arteries and sweat forming at the brow.Proof that tremendous sweetness can be extracted from deep angst.Internal Nashville critique that’s both comedic and laser precise.What a soothing, worrisome, hopeful whisper.The K-pop group BTS showcased its close relationship with its fans at Citi Field.Credit...Nina Westervelt for The New York Times Jon ParelesThe 1975 capture the challenges of the social-media age on “Love It If We Made It.”Credit...Magdalena Wosinska for The New York TimesIn a swirl of harplike arpeggios over a stubborn beat, Matty Healy rails at hypocrisy and disinformation, complaining “Modernity has failed us,” and admits to individual ambition despite it all; a millennial’s plight.Desolate lost love haunts the verses before determined self-preservation lifts the choruses, all at a tempo so slow only a singer like Sade would dare it.Rocks rock goes noir, with tolling piano and reverbed guitar, in a ballad about a lasting trauma, unnamed but inescapable.Over mournful electric-piano chords, Jorja Smith warns that in a rough neighborhood, panic can be deadly, counseling, “Don’t you run when you hear the sirens coming.”Post-breakup revenge is served cold, unforgiving and viscous in “Look What U Started,” from its skulking bass line and squishy rhythm guitar to the chilling whisper of Syd’s vocal.A perfectly calibrated power ballad, with the Lady Gaga chorus trademark of repeated syllables, does movie-musical triple duty as love song, vocal showcase and plot pivot.Kendrick Lamar provided “Black Panther” with a weighty soundtrack.Credit...Larry Busacca/Getty ImagesFar more ambitious than a movie theme has to be, and far more abrasive, “Black Panther” celebrates a broad African heritage over a track that broods, stomps and bristles.Fatouma Diawara, a Paris-based singer who grew up in Mali, sings about love for an emigrant who may never return, lacing Malian rhythms with tendrils of guitar.Over a Bo Diddley beat, Richard Thompson longs for a cleansing apocalypse, and summons it with a wailing, clawing guitar solo.With guests from Puerto Rico and Colombia over a sample of Pete Rodriguez’s 1966 boogaloo “I Like It Like That,” Cardi B flaunts Latin roots while making designer-label materialism sound like self-realization.Loops of plucked violin and layers of vocals add up to a statement of no-nonsense, matter-of-fact individualism from Britney Parks, who records as the one-woman electronic band Sudan Archives.The vamp is insistently jaunty, the rhymes are delivered with a jokey cadence and there are melodic interludes, but the recurring subject is serious: gun violence.The indie-rock songwriters Lucy Dacus, Julien Baker and Phoebe Bridgers, collaborating as boygenius, share a not-exactly-love song that passionately questions itself.As her production taps out cross-rhythms like a flock of woodpeckers, Marie Davidson’s spoken words demand nonstop work: a gig-economy ultimatum.Loneliness and moderate depression find a tambourine-tapping equilibrium, with distant hints of the Beach Boys.Onohtrix Point Never performed songs from his new album, “Age Of...,” in New York.Credit...Nina Westervelt for The New York TimesBad Bunny made a huge impact this year without putting out an album of his own.Credit...Ethan Miller/Getty ImagesWith no album or even a mixtape to speak of, Bad Bunny made himself indispensable this year by way of strategic collaborations and scene-stealing, rug-pulling moments.
